DEATH.

At Hongkong, on the 15th inst., LEONARDO
D'ALMADA E CASTRO, aged 60 years.

The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, JANUARY 16th, 1875.

THE most infamous traffic that has ever disgraced mankind, and the one that has wrought most intense misery to its victims is the slave-trade. But a lower deep is reached when it exists to supply women and girls for the purposes of prostitution. Such a traffic has long been carried on by some of the Chinese, and the authorities at the various ports have apparently been powerless to stay the evil. It is a common occurrence in our Police Court for Chinese to be charged with kidnapping and selling young girls to men, who take them to the Straits Settlements, San Francisco, and elsewhere. One such case, where a girl charges a woman with selling her to a man to go to Singapore, is pending now, and is a type of many more.

This is a deplorable state of affairs; and must surely admit of some rectification. An importation of girls from Belgium to London, for similar purposes, was discovered some little time ago, and the vice practice promptly nipped in the bud. With the Chinese it is a much more difficult matter. Their notions of morality are so low, and the estimation in which women are held among them so low, that the enormity of the offence is not fully recognised by them. But it must be taught them when opportunity offers, by the infliction of a severe sentence for such crimes against civilization and decency.

As one means to this end it is gratifying to note that the American Government intend to make the importation of Chinese females for immoral purposes, and of coolies for servile labour, the subject of early legislation.

In the President's Message to Congress a reference was made to the subject, and any movement for their prevention would, it was stated, meet his approval and, if carried, be strictly enforced. Mr. PAGE, a California senator, has espoused the cause, and will take steps in Congress to get some measure passed to secure this object. The evil has attained a great height in San Francisco, and no doubt one originating cause is the present faulty system of emigration. It is the custom to ship hundreds of coolies, who have engaged for a term of years, to various places, from whence, when their term has expired, they return with their savings. Now, though this may be satisfactory to them, it does not work well for those who engage them or for the country they go to. They are not attached to the soil; they come and go, and fresh supplies of labour, at great expense, have to be procured. Added to this, the absence of women has a demoralizing effect on them, and is productive of much crime. If they were engaged for a longer term of years, treated better, and paid a little more liberally, and if, in addition, they were allowed and encouraged to take their wives with them, they would become more reconciled to their new home, and more likely to make it their permanent abiding-place. The first cost would, of course, be greater, but the outlay would be compensated for, as the expense of bringing them out would not need to be repeated so soon, if at all, as their children would grow up in the meantime and supply the place of their parents. This system would also act powerfully in keeping the coolies contented and happy, and the moral effect would soon be apparent. Everyone who knows anything about the Celestials is acquainted with their passion for the old land, which is illustrated by their practice of sending the dead home to be buried there at great cost and trouble; but there is no reason why they should not soon be weaned from this excessive attachment to a land which possesses so tempting a population. They make good settlers; are industrious, thrifty, and law-abiding. The Irish and the Negroes, it is true, regard them with great aversion, because they perform much of the lower class of work, which was formerly monopolised by the former, for smaller recompence, and regard their growing numbers with great disfavour. While, however, measures are concerted to put a stop to the importation of Chinese women in the Western States, for immoral purposes, and for the better regulation of the Chinese immigration, we trust the latter will not be checked, for there can be no doubt that the overflow of the population of China should spread into a country where the only need is man. But the abominable traffic in flesh and blood will, we trust, receive one more check from the action of Mr. PAGE, which is worthy of all commendation.

The M.M. steamer Ansonia, which sailed from Macau on the 29th of December, and is due at Hongkong on the 29th inst., left Galli at her proper date, Wednesday morning, the 13th inst.We regret to have to record the death of Mr. LEONARDO D'ALMADA E CASTRO, one of the officers in the Colonial Office. The deceased gentleman, who was widely and deservedly respected, entered the public service in January, 1837, in the office of the chief superintendent of British subjects in China. Subsequently he was appointed to the Portuguese Consulate at Macau, and he died there on the 12th, and his funeral was held at 8 a.m. this morning, at the Roman Catholic Cathedral, and the funeral, which will leave Hongkong at 4 p.m. this day.

BEFORE C. MAX, Esq.

EXPORTATION OF CHAIR COOLES.

Choy Achum and another chair coole, holding license No. 97, were charged with extorting more than their legal fee.

P. C. No. 77, McClellan, said last evening the defendant charged a seaman named J. NEVERSON, 50 cents for bringing him only from the London Inn to the Sailor's Home.

The Plaintiff said that he engaged their chair in Wellington at 2 p.m., went to the Home then back to the London Inn, and back again to the Home.

Thompson, the barkeeper at the London Inn, said the Plaintiff arrived at the London Inn at 4 p.m. in a chaur, and said he had come only from the Home. He gave him change for a 20 cent piece, and he paid 10 cents for his chair. The Plaintiff said he was charged at 4.50 the 50 cents.

Defendants were fined $5 each; in default one month's hard labour.

KIDNAPPERS.

Ho I Hoi, a rent collector, charged a woman named Chan Yuen Hoi with kidnapping her daughter Ho I Hoi, 15 years of age, from Wan Lin house.

The complainant said the defendant lived in Wan Lin house, and last night he was out in Bridge street and saw the defendant leading his daughter along. He asked his daughter where she was going, and she said with the defendant to see the attorney. The defendant was recalled, but again contradicted himself.

The defendant was discharged.

THE TRAFFIC IN CHAIR COOLES.

The Plaintiff, a man named Wong, who was charged with kidnapping his daughter Lin, 15 years of age, for the purpose of sending her to Singapore, on again.

The girl, Lin Aikai, in evidence, said the defendant carried out her agreement to get her employment in the colony she would have consented to serve her although she had been bought and sold against her will, but she objected to being made a prostitute or, being sold, to being a slave.

The Plaintiff said that it mattered not who bought her, she was free, and could say she was a slave to none the moment she set foot on this island.

The defendant said she did not buy the girl. The girl herself borrowed from her $200 and made a solemn promise to work out with her, and to return the sum when she was free.

Extracts.

ETERNITY.
Dark, thoughtless friend, that soulless toll
Speaks the departure of a soul.
"I'm gone." That's all. We know not where,
Or how the unclouded soul does fare.
Oh! by what glimmering lights we view
The unknown world we're hastening to;
God has locked up the mystic page,
And we're to read it in the next stage.
Wise heur to reside in such a port,
Has drawn a twist this world and the next
A dark, impenetrable screen,
Behind which all is yet unseen.

We talk of heaven, we talk of hell,
But what they mean no tongue can tell!
Heaven, "the realm where angels are,"
And hell, "the realm where devils are,"
But what these awful words imply,
None of us know before we die.
Whether we will, or we, we must
Take the succeeding world on trust.

This hour, perhaps, our friend is well,
Doubtless, the next he'll be worse off;
Thus comes it from the world's tempestuous shore,
Inself'd in death appears no more;
Then, undressed, to repair
To distant worlds, we know not where.

PREFERENCE FOR KINGS.

Our ancestors called themselves free, and in deep sense were so. They understood that no king had a right to trample up the written law in this shabby fist of a despotic people. The prerogative of the Crown was, they vaguely conceived, the blazon and the buckler of the people. But an anointed king was for them a sacred personage. There was something supernatural about him. Superstition was still a colossal power, even in Protestant countries; men believed in witchcraft and astrology as truly as we believe in dividends; and royal touch was still held to be potent in the cure of epilepsy. In its noblest form Shakespeare entertained this reverence for kings, and expressed it perfectly and impressively when he spoke of the "divinity that doth hedge a king." If you would realise the difference between the antique England of the Jacobean period and the England of the Victorian age, read Macaulay's impudently contemptuous sketch of James, and then turn to the following lines, in which Shakespeare, who was a subject first of Elizabeth and then of James, eulogises both.—

As when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix
Herself new creates another her,
As great in admiration as herself;

So shall her sons her honour to her
And make her name, as great in fame as she was,

And so confound. Peace, plenty, love, truth, terror;

That were the servants of this chosen infant,

Shall then be his, and like a vine to grow him,

Wherever he brings his chosen leaf shall shine;

He'll make a man of man;

Shall be and make nowrations. He shall flourish,

And like a mountain cedar, reach his branches

To all the plain about him.

It is not reasonable to say, in these lines, Shakespeare was a mere Court flatterer. The reverence for kings that pervades his historical plays was infinitely deeper than Court flattery. What he wrote about James was as natural, becoming, and right in the eyes of his generation, as what Mr. Tennyson has written about Queen Victoria is in the eyes of ours. If Shakespeare had told James that his throne was "broad-based upon the people's will," he would either have received some serious mark of the royal displeasure, or if James had happened to be in his best mood, would have been sent for and treated on his knees, to a scolding lecture, an hour long, on the sacred and imprescriptible rights of the Lord's anointed, while envoys stood round in gaping admiration and archbishops declaimed in lowly accents that the cascade of nonsense was inspired by God.—Contemporary Review.

ARRESTED IN THE SIMPLON.

A misunderstanding with a guide, whom he had engaged to carry his knapsack over the Simplon, led to a sufficiently annoying detention, which, however, enlarged his experience, as he became acquainted with the interior of a Sardinian prison. He thus tells the story:—At Isella my attendant declined coming any further, and put down my baggage just when I began to have need of his services. As thereby he broke his contract, not having come half way, I only gave him half what we had agreed on. When I had gone a little way he attempted to stop me, putting his hand on my arm, but I proceeded. Soon afterwards he again tried to stop me, seizing my arm, and preventing me from proceeding. As I had now got further from Isella, I began to apprehend personal violence, and that I might be prepared to defend myself, I threw down my baggage and took from my coat pocket a loaded pistol, which I put in my waistcoat pocket. I find it here asserted that I pointed it at him, but this is a gentleman and a Christian. I solemnly deny, declaring that I merely placed it in my pocket where, in an extra emergency, it would be within my reach. He ran back, however, and soon was overtaken by a soldier, who approached me with an appearance of civility, but suddenly seized me with a violence and behaved with an insolence which was quite unnecessary, and more than his duty called for. Though I made no attempt at resistance, he struck me and threatened me with handcuffs, and for the greater part of the way to the guardroom assailed me with personal invectives. Then came another soldier, who held me on the other side, so that I was led pell-mell until very near this place, where they suffered me to walk between them. Here my story and that of my peasant companion were told; and after a little time the tone of the soldiers moderated into a sort of official civility. It was told to consider myself under arrest; my knapsack was searched, and my pistol and tank taken away. One of soldiers has threatened me with handcuffs and prison, but the others, especially the first, are now sufficiently civil. Whether this change of tone is produced by my threat of a formal complaint, or is the result of natural moderation, I do not know; they have not allowed me to write. I will add a word to my pistols. From Paris to Lausanne and through a great part of Switzerland I have travelled chiefly on foot, and generally alone, and the possession of loaded pistols under such circumstances cannot with fairness be supposed to argue any criminal intention. The soldiers and I became great friends, especially my captor. He told several stories, saying he had great difficulties with the English, and accounted for it by saying that in England the military profession was not much respected. The moral of his stories was, I might as well be contented. He had some good tobacco, and we smoked together. By degree I felt very comfortable, and drew up my statements (as above given) at one end of the table, while he did the same at the other end, and we disputed laughing as to which was most likely to succeed. Charles of Sardinia is the only person who has given me lodgings and clean sheets gratis on my travels. I wish his liberality had extended to supper.—Life and Letters of Rowland Williams, D.D.

A CONTEAR.—More than two thousand houses have been erected in San Francisco within the last twelve months. In New York on the other hand, building is almost entirely ceased, and there are few thousand carpenters are out of employment. Competition among contractors is so sharp that there is very little profit in building, and the few carpenters who are still so fortunate as to have something to do, have had to submit to a reduction of wages to the extent of fully one-fourth. All this is true in spite of the fact that there are scores of greenbacks and bank notes in New York, and almost none at all in San Francisco.—Chicago Times.
